

Hotel Shangri-La in Santa Monica Will Reopen in January With New "Green" Elements

The Hotel Shangri-La in Santa Monica, which has recently undergone a $30 million refurbishment, will not only reopen in January 2009 with a sleek new look, but also with many new green amenities and practices.

The Hotel Shangri-La, which is overlooking the Pacific Ocean on Ocean Ave, is dedicating itself to being environmentally conscious. The newly redesigned hotel, which will display a mix of nostalgic Art Deco elements with a contemporary twist, will be adding a restaurant, an elevated pool with cabanas, and a rooftop bar named Suite 700. Other changes include many eco-friendly elements and amenities which allow guests to enjoy a sustainable escape with good conscience. Hotelier Tehmina Adaya says, "Hotels are notoriously one of the biggest offenders to the environment, and we wanted to challenge this idea by incorporating easy elements to eliminate excessive and unnecessary waste."

Included in the list of eco-friendly elements are:

- Bath amenities from Natura Green. Packaging is made recycled paper and bottles are bio-degradable (made from a cornstarch based product), and all products are non-animal tested.
- $5.00 off Overnight Valet Parking for guests driving a hybrid vehicle.
- Bottled Water provided from Natura Waters. All carbonization and filtration will be done on-site and glass bottles are sanitized and re-used.

- Newspapers will be delivered to guest rooms upon request, not as a standard, to save thousands of copies that are never read.

- The restaurant will be supplied by local vendors and purveyors.
- The wine list will feature primarily American wines to help lower carbon impact.
